PREFACE.

WE fear that many of our patrons will not duly appreciate the amount of labor and care incident to the preparation and publication of a City Directory ; and especially in a city like Akron, whose growth has been such as to annually outgrow its previously prescribed limits—making new streets unnamed, and multitudes of houses unnumbered, which greatly increases the labors and difficulties of canvassing. In many instances it has been almost impossible to locate such houses intelligibly. Notwithstanding the great difficulties we trust we have been enabled to present a work which will be not only creditably accurate, but meet the entire satisfaction of our patrons.

HISTORY

OR

Summit County and the City of Akron.

So much may be written respecting Summit County, that we find it extremely difficult in compiling so brief a sketch as can be admitted to a work of this kind ; to discriminate between the great number of interesting historical incidents and information presented.

Summit County was formed from Portage, Medina and Stark Counties, in 1840—called "Summit" from having the highest land on the Ohio Canal, originally called "Portage Summit." Along the Cuyahoga it is uneven and hilly ; elsewhere level or undulating. In Tallmadge and Springfield are extensive beds of bituminous Coal, from which large quantities are exported and used upon the lake steamers. In some parts of the County fine clay abounds, from which large quantities of stone-ware is made.

The soil is fertile, producing excellent fruit, and well adapted to almost every department of agriculture and horticulture. The vine is much cultivated, and with marked success.

We are indebted for the following interesting sketch of the settlement of Summit County and the City of Akron, to a small work entitled "Reminiscences of Summit County," by Gen. LUCIUS V. BIERCE, present Mayor of Akron, which was published in 1854 :

"When we cast our eyes North, and see Old Portage, a celebrated boundary in the Treaty of Fort McIntosh in 1785—South, and see New Portage, from which boats were formerly fitted out to New Orleans—when we look West, and see within our Township, and almost within our corporation, the celebrated 'Indian Trail,' once the boundary between the Six Nations and the Western Indians—and by the Treaty of Greenville, in 1795, made the boundary between the United States and Indians—we find ourselves on classic ground, surrounded by historic mementoes that connect Akron with the past, as a child of promise. In speaking of her we are necessarily led to a consideration of the Indian Trail, or Portage Path—then to the history of the Indians connected with that 'Path;' and this leads us to a consideration of the history of that early day when that Path was the great highway of Nations—nations that existed before America was known to Europeans.

"I will not claim for Akron a history as remote as Knickerbocker claims for New York, but it is so connected with the Indian wars, treaties, and boundaries, that we cannot well speak of Akron without beginning at the close of the Revolutionary war.

"At the close of that war, this vast North-Western Territory became a subject of great interest to the National Government, as well as to certain States. Virginia claimed about one-half, and Connecticut the other half of what is now Ohio. Virginia subsequently relinquished all except the tract between the Scioto and Miami rivers, known as the Virginia Military Tract, and Connecticut relinquished all but 4,000,000 acres, known as the 'Connecticut Western Reserve,' or 'New Connecticut.' In 1786 the 'Ohio Company' was formed, consisting chiefly of officers and soldiers of the Revolution, who had expended everything but life in that struggle, and received as pay the promises of a Government that was totally insolvent. These unfortunate men purchased the tract known as 'The Ohio Company Purchase,' and paid in the currency known as 'Continental Money.' Of this company was Gen. Parsons, of Newburyport, Massachusetts. He was a Major General in the war, and served to the close of it with credit.

He subsequently became connected with the history of the Reserve, as he obtained permission from the Governor of Connecticut to occupy the salt springs in what is now Weathersfield, in Trumbull County. He had some kind of a grant by which his heirs claimed the property; but he was accidentally drowned in the Big Beaver on his return to Connecticut, in 1789—his claim was rejected, and the 'Salt Spring tract' became again vested in Connecticut. He may be said to be the pioneer of 'the Reserve,' and the connecting link between the two companies.

"In 1795 Connecticut sold her lands to the 'Connecticut Land Company,' and thus the two great companies became rivals in the settlement of the Territory. The Ohio Company commenced their settlement at Marietta in April, 1788—eight years before the Connecticut Company commenced theirs.

"As early as January, 1785, a treaty had been concluded at Fort McIntosh, (now Beaver, Pa.) with the Indians, by which it was declared that the boundary between the United States and the Indians should 'commence at the mouth of the Cuyahoga, to extend up the river to the Portage, between that and the Tuscarora branch of the Muskingum, then down that branch to the crossing above Fort Laurens,' (now Bolivar).

"The Indians being still dissatisfied, a new treaty was made with them, by Governor St. Clair, in 1789, by which the boundaries, as fixed by the treaty of Fort McIntosh, were confirmed.

"This did not, however, produce the results anticipated, and the Indians seemed determined to hold on to their beloved rivers Cuyahoga and Tuscarawas. This produced the fatal expeditions of Harmar in 1790, and St. Clair in '91, and the victorious expedition of Wayne in '94. In the spring of 1794 the army assembled at Fort Greenville, now the county seat of Darke county, and on the 20th of August of that year, encountered the combined Indian forces at the foot of the Maumee rapids, and there, forever, broke down the Indian spirit. At least a dozen tribes were engaged in the battle, and nearly every chief except Richardville, chief of the Miamies, was slain. In August, 1795, Wayne concluded a treaty at Greenville, with some of these tribes, by which they confirmed the treaty of Fort McIntosh, and the Cuyahoga river and Portage Path were again established as the Western boundary of the United States.

"But fifty-six years have passed since the title to the ground on which we stand was decided by the arbitration of the sword and tomahawk ; and fifty years have not yet passed since the ground on which the public buildings are located, were in the undisputed possession of the red men of the forest.

"In July, 1796, one year after the formation of the Connecticut Land Company, the first surveying party arrived at Cleveland ; and in the fall of that year the first permanent settlement was made where that city now stands. In September and October of that year the city was laid out, and was named in honor of Gen. Moses Cleveland, of Connecticut, who was one of the exploring party. Cleveland was then on the western verge of the United States, the river only separating it from the Indian land. But two families remained there through the winter of '96—97, and their nearest neighbors were at River Raisin, the mouth of Big Beaver, and Conneaut. Sickness and other causes conspired to retard its growth, and from January '99 to April 1800, a period of 16 months, Lorenzo Carter, from Rutland, Vermont, was the only inhabitant of that city.

"The spring of '99 was a noted era in the history of the Reserve. A grist mill was erected at the Falls in Newburgh, in which the inhabitants could get their corn ground, instead of pounding it. This was the first mill on the Reserve.

"In May '99, Lewis Day, and others, arrived at Deerfield, Portage County, in a wagon, which, so far as I can learn was the first wagon ever so far west ; and on the 7th of November of that year, Gen. John Campbell married a daughter of Mr. Ely, which I believe, was the first wedding in the bounds of Portage County, which then included this. They were married by Calvin Austin Esq., of Warren, who in company with Calvin Pease, afterward Judge of our Supreme Court, came to the wedding on foot, there being no roads.

"The first permanent settlement made in this County, was in 1800, by David Hudson, at what is now called Hudson in honor of him. This year had nearly proved fatal to the whites, through the imprudence of two men, McMahon and Story, who killed Capt. George and Spotted John, two Indians at the salt works in Trumbull County. McMahon was tried and acquitted. Story fled. Onondaga George was present, and insisted upon taking immediate vengeance by an indiscriminate slaughter of the whites before they had time to unite for defence; but captain Peters, another chief, was bribed by the whites, and he prevented the extermination of the white race on the Reserve.

“McMahon in the war of 1812, served in the north western army, under Harrison, and was discharged in November of that year, and took a path for the Old Portage, but was overtaken by some Indians and made to pay the penalty of the Salt Spring murder.

“The first mail route through any part of that country was established by Mr. Granger, P. M. General, in 1806, from Pittsburgh to Warren, Ashtabula and Cleveland, thence to Hudson in this county—then through the wilderness to Deerfield, and then to Pittsburgh, which route was performed weekly on horseback.

“In 1806, one of those occurrences happened that again endangered the peace of the settlement. Some Mohawk Indians encamped in Deerfield, conceiving themselves wronged in a horse trade, shot Daniel Diver through the head.—The party consisted of John Mohawk, Bigson and his two sons. At this time all the militia in Portage county composed one Battalion under the command of Maj. Rogers, of Deerfield. He assembled some of his men, and started in pursuit. On the following night they overtook the Indians encamped on the western bank of the Cuyahoga in what is now Boston. They fired upon them, and killed Nicksaw, and took Bigson and his son prisoners. It was in the depth of winter, and the Indians were taken back, bound, and not even allowed the covering that would have made a brute comfortable.

“The consequences were that the Indians were frozen so that they were crippled for life. They were tried and acquitted, as the act was that of Mohawk, in consequence of a quarrel between him and Diver, in which the others had no part. But though acquitted he could no longer pursue the chase. His squaw perished in the woods after his capture, and the poor old Indian and his sons would sit for hours on the banks of the Mahoning, and weep over their fallen condition. What made his regrets more painful was, he had ever been the friend of the whites—served under Wayne in his battle with the Indians—had been entrusted with important charges, and ever proved faithful to his trust. Such was the gratitude—such the reward bestowed by the whites.*

"In 1811 Onondaga George, with a large body of Indians were found stationed along the river without any apparent object. The Indians were sulky and hostile, and Captain George, as he was called, would flourish his tomahawk and scalping knife in apparent defiance. After a few days they disappeared as suddenly as they appeared, and have not been seen here since. Three days after their departure news came of the Battle of Tippecanoe. It was then evident that they were a part of the great Indian plan for exterminating the whites, and had the issue of that battle been different, Capt. George with his band would have destroyed all the scattered settlements west of the Cuyahoga. During the time they remained they kept a 'look out' on a high bluff point west of the place where the second lock is located at Old Portage.

"Their runners brought intelligence of the Indian defeat to them, three days before the news reached the whites.

"On the bursting out of the war of 1812, so important was the Old Portage deemed as a military post, that General Wadsworth, with a portion of the army, was stationed there on the bank west of the two Locks'; but so signal had been the defeat of the Indians at Tippecanoe, that few, if any, have ever returned to their favorite haunts on the Cuyahoga, or traversed their war-path across the Portage. Their council fires are extinguished—the war-whoop is still—the war-path untrodden. The furnace stands on the cold council hearth—the shuttle and the mill are heard instead of the war-whoop—and the railroad and the canal occupy the war-path. Most of them have gone with their chief, Tecumseh, to the Great Spirit; the survivors have been driven to the setting sun—civilization has been advanced by their destruction, but humanity weeps over the wrongs and extinction, of the Red man of the forest.

"On the extinction of the Indian title, settlers began to *"Capt. Hem an Oviatt, of Richfield, who lived in Hudson at the time of the capture of Bigson, says:

"Bigson was brought to my house, bare-footed, and begged of me a pair of moccasins, to keep his feet from freezing. I was going to give him a pair, when Major Roger threatened to put me under guard if I did, and he was taken away without any.'

"In 'Ohio, its history and antiquities,' page 417, it is said:

"The narrator has seen this frost-bitten chief, Bigson, who had been frozen to death,' etc.

flock in. In 1811, Major Spicer, Amos Spicer, Paul and B. Williams made a settlement a little east of the present corporation, where Maj. Spicer and his Lady, formerly Mrs. Williams, who a few years ago still resided on the old location, surrounded by his own and the descendants of the others.

"Immediately on the location of the Ohio Canal, Gen. Perkins and Paul Williams laid out Akron, and it began to improve. The first house erected was the building on the corner of Main and Exchange streets, lately occupied by Mr. McDonald as a Tavern. The timber was cleared from the ground where it stands, and the house erected in Sept., 1825, after the town was located, but before it was named.

"In 1829, Akron had become a Port, and Woolsey Wells Esq., was Attorney at Law, Justice of the Peace, Postmaster, and Canal Collector for the Port of Akron. I have in my cabinet of curiosities, his desk, about two feet by eighteen inches, that contained in its pigeon holes, all the files, and documents of his multifarious offices. He, with Major Mills, Joshua King, and Joseph Keeler, the last of whom kept a little log grocery on the bank north of the Summit House, then composed the business part of Akron.

"In 1831 Dr. Crosby, to whom Akron owes a debt of gratitude that can never be cancelled, conceived the project of bringing the Little Cuyahoga, from Middlebury round to Akron, and thus creating an immense water-power.

"No sooner was the project conceived than it was undertaken, and before his plan could be comprehended, by others, he had 'Cascade mill race' dug, and the Stonc-mill in operation.

"In 1832, Charles W. Howard, one of the most enterprising business men that ever lived in Akron, erected the building on the corner, known as Hall's store, which was burnt February, 1851. In honor of his enterprise the proprietors named the principal street, after him, 'Howard Street.' The Town at this time, contained about 600 inhabitants.

"The first Canal Boat, for Cleveland, cleared from Akron, July 4, 1827, causing great rejoicing, as it moved off at a speed of three miles an hour through the Portage and Northampton hills.

"It is usually thought that business and literature are incompatible with each other—but if the number of publications is evidence of the literature of Akron, she is the Athens of Ohio. No less than twenty-two periodicals have been published in this town since 1836. The first was 'The Akron

Weekly Post,' by Madison H. White—the first number of which was issued March 19, 1836; then the 'Akron Journal,' by C. Bryan; 'The Era,' by J. F. Fenn; 'The American Balance,' by Smith and Galloway; 'The Buzzard,' by Jedediah Brownbread; 'Glad Tidings,' by Whitney, Davis, and Doolittle; 'The Flower of the West,' by Allison and Rumrix; 'The Pestalozzian,' by S. L. Sawtell and Co.; 'The Cascade Roarer,' by S. A. Lane and Co.; 'Summit Beacon,' by H. Bowen; 'The Flail,' by L. L. Howard; 'The American Democrat,' by H. Canfield; 'The Casket,' 'Free-Soil Platform,' 'Akron Eagle,' 'Free Democrat,' 'True Kindred,' 'Akron Offering,' 'Free Democratic Standard,' 'The Sockdolager,' 'The Whip,' and the 'School-Mistress.'

"As an additional evidence of our being a literary people, the Legislature in 1844 chartered a college in Akron, with power to confer literary, legal, medical, and theological degrees, which is in full force, to be acted upon when the times and circumstances render it expedient.

"Such is a brief outline of the ancient history of Akron. When we look forward, we are lost in wonder. The Portage Path, the ancient boundary of the United States, is now the dividing line between the East and the West. Instead of the Indian trail the Railroad is running in all directions; and when the route connecting the Pittsburgh and Cleveland, with the Central Railroad at Wooster shall be completed—when our immense beds of stone-coal, iron and pottery, shall have an opening to market—when our flour, by a speedy transportation to market, can come in competition with the New York and Eastern production—when the milk from our dairies can be sent, while yet almost warm, to the New York market, Akron will indeed be not only the child of promise, but of fulfillment.

"By the fires of June and September 1849, December 1849, and February 1851, the business part of ancient Akron has been hid in ruins, but, like the Phoenix, she has arisen from the ashes, reinvigorated, rejuvenated, and beautified. This is 'our much loved home.'"
